Figure 7. The temperature proxies considered. Composite temperature is a weighted mean of several temperature reconstructions from China (12, 29) and is the proxy used in the analyses presented in the main text. Beijing temperature is a near annually-resolved May-August proxy based on stalagmite layer thickness in a cave near Beijing (25). Both proxies are shown at a decadal scale. (References: see Materials and Methods).